- RMSI, a global geospatial and software services company, today announced the re-launch of its corporate site (www.rmsi.com) with a new look and a host of interactive features.

The new site has a fresh modern interface and is developed using web 2.0 and W3C standards. It provides the viewers in-depth information about the organization, it's services, market segmentation and quality processes. The corporate site connects seamlessly to our industry microsities, which provide domain specific solutions for the following industry segments - Agriculture & Natural Resources, Land Information Management, Wireless Telecommunications, Risk & Insurance, and Utilities.

As per Anup Jindal, Chief Operating Officer, RMSI "Our website and microsities provide a user rich experience. These are positioned as dynamic platforms to provide easy and quick access to business critical information and promote the organization's brand".

From a navigational point of view, the website's salient features include easy-to-use functionality, allowing users to quickly reference desired information, a faster download time, and multiple navigational options. From the homepage (www.rmsi.com), one can easily access information using either shortcuts or drop down menus.

The website can be best viewed at a resolution of 1024 x 768 pixels and the site is compatible with all next generation browsers and mobile devices.
