Bangalore: If you are searching for a job, you would be very lucky if you get into any of the companies listed on the list of 'India's Best Companies to Work For 2009'. According to the study, RMSI, a software application developer based in Noida was India's best workplace. Chip maker Intel was placed second ahead of Federal Express. Other companies that have made it to the dream Top 10 list are Aviva, Google, Qualcomm, Marriott, Amex, NetApp and NTPC, in that order. The study was conducted by The Economic Times and The Great Place to Work Institute India.

The study, released on Tuesday, is in its sixth year and has picked up 50 best workplaces in India. The study involved up to 373 companies which registered from across 25 industry verticals in India.

This year, the study was certified by Suresh Surana & Associates, the 6th largest accounting and consultancy firm in India.

This year, the survey has unleashed up to seven special categories, like excellence in CSR, where IT behemoth Infosys makes a dent. Similarly, in terms of management credibility, HDFC rules supreme. There are many more which may not figure in the top 25, but have made their mark within their respective industry verticals by leading the group.

A wide spectrum of metrics, ranging from corporate governance to work-life balance and from empowerment to equity, was used to cull out India's best work places. When compared to the top 100 companies in the US, the top 50 Indian companies are not far behind. This highlights the fact that India can grow if it leverages its human and intellectual capital.
